What you can do for the future

The most common type of deferred planned gift is the charitable request. It can be as simple as a sentence or two in your will, or a codicil appended to your present will. Your bequest may specify a certain sum of money: “I give to NAPO the sum of $_____ to be used for its general purposes.”

If you prefer, you may give a particular asset (“my shares of XYZ stock”) or a portion of the residue of your estate after other bequests have been paid (“50% of the rest, residue and remainder of my estate”). In consultation with NAPO, you may designate a particular purpose for which your bequest is to be used. Your estate will be entitled to a donation receipt for the full value of the bequest, which may reduce significantly the tax payable with your final income tax return.

A gift of life insurance can provide a significant future gift to NAPO at a very modest, present cost to you. You may make such a gift with either an existing policy or a new one.

You may give the death benefit of an existing policy simply by naming NAPO as the beneficiary. However, to receive a current tax benefit, you must also transfer ownership of the policy to NAPO which entitles you to a donation receipt for the cash value of the policy. When you make NAPO the owner and beneficiary of a new policy, you receive a donation receipt for every premium you subsequently pay. At your death, NAPO will receive the proceeds.
